How Not to Handle an Unwanted Assignment

Someone drops a 47-page report on your desk.
It was Todd's job. Todd quit.

You said "Sure, happy to help."

Congrats! You just volunteered for solitary.

You don’t take on more time.
You negotiate. With your Shank.

I’m not saying the pen is why he backed off.
I’m just saying he backed off and I was holding it.

That’s not intimidation.
That’s showing initiative as a leader with props.

3 PM. Conference room B.
They called it a “team sync.”
I call it lockdown.

I started a riot in Q2.
HR called it “disruptive feedback.”

The next one, I didn’t attend.
I sent a ransom note.

Meeting cancelled. No follow-up.
That’s not terrorism. That’s efficiency.

First thing you do is case the floor.

I found three exits, one blind spot,
and Gary’s stapler.

Gary asked for it back once. Once.

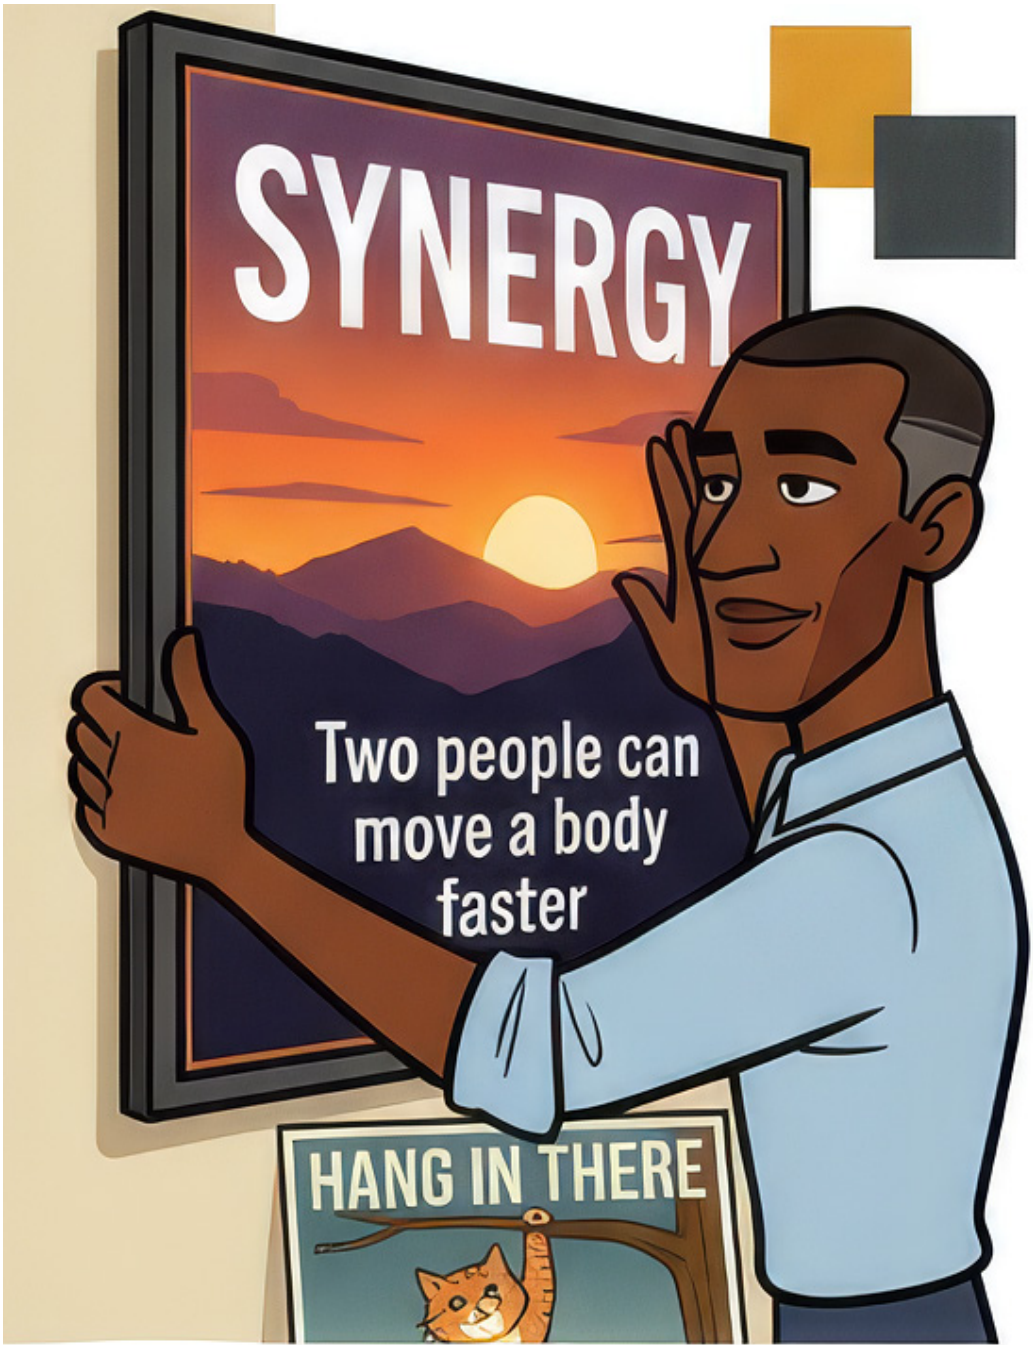

Sometimes you just agree to disagree.

Safety first.

Unless you’re up for promotion.

The walls talk.

Make sure they’re saying the right things.

The Reply-All Offender

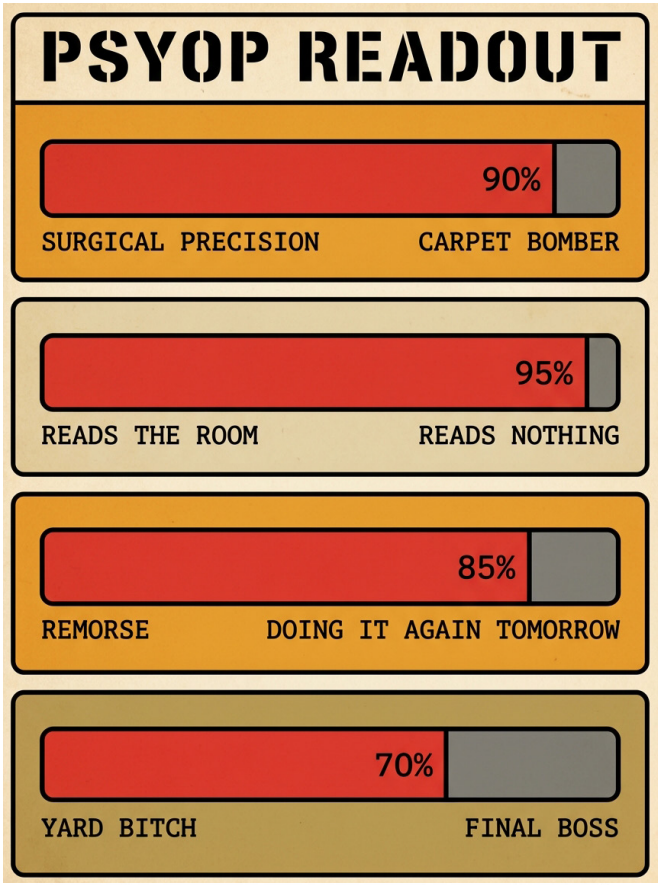

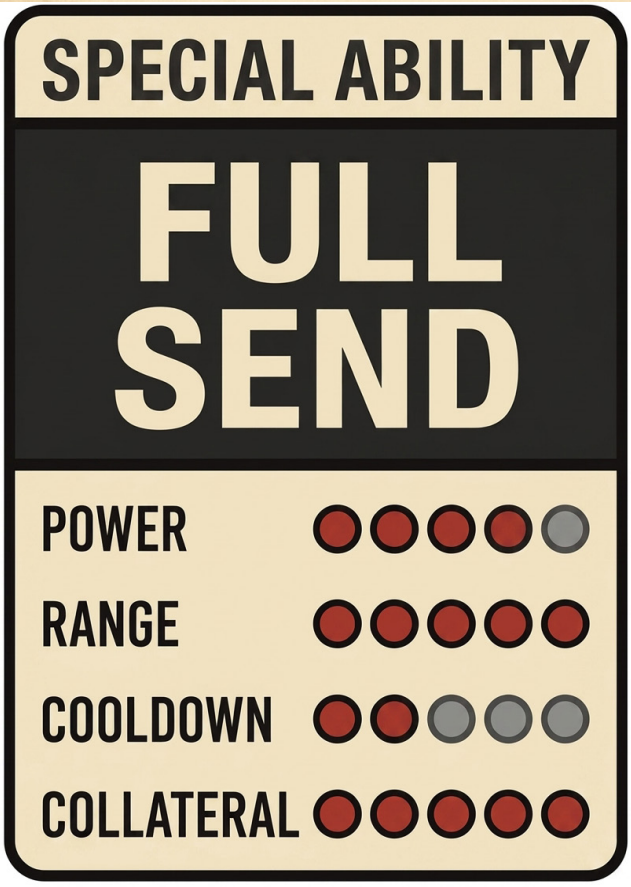

If she has a thought, you will hear it. All of you.

She once Reply-All'd 'who died?' to a sympathy card chain.

Nobody had died yet. It was a retirement.
